The Assyrian Empire

The Assyrian Empire was one of the most powerful and influential empires in the ancient world. It was founded in the 14th century BC and reached its peak in the 7th century BC, under the rule of kings such as Tiglath-Pileser III, Sargon II, Sennacherib, Esarhaddon, and Ashurbanipal. The Assyrians were known for their military prowess and their administrative efficiency, and they ruled over a vast empire that stretched from present-day Turkey to Egypt and from the Arabian Peninsula to the Persian Gulf.

Judah and the Assyrian Empire

The first contact between Judah and Assyria occurred in the 9th century BC, during the reign of King Ahaz of Judah. Ahaz was faced with a coalition of enemies, including the kingdom of Israel and the Arameans, and he appealed to the Assyrians for help. The Assyrians responded by invading Israel and deporting its people, and they also annexed part of Judah's territory.

The relationship between Judah and Assyria continued to be strained for the next century. The Assyrians repeatedly invaded Judah, and they eventually destroyed Jerusalem and exiled the people of Judah in 586 BC.

The Impact of the Assyrian Empire on Judah

The Assyrian Empire had a profound impact on Judah. The Assyrians introduced new administrative and political practices, and they also influenced Judah's religious beliefs and practices. The Assyrians also left a lasting legacy in Judah, in the form of archaeological remains and historical records.
