Making a Murderer was a powerful indictment of the American criminal justice system. The series raised serious questions about Avery's guilt and exposed the many flaws in the prosecution's case. However, the series also left many unanswered questions. In Motion Denied, author Kathleen

Zellner sets out to answer those questions and provide a definitive account of what really happened in the Avery case.

Zellner is a renowned defense attorney who has represented Avery since 2016. She has spent years investigating the case and has uncovered a wealth of new evidence that casts serious doubt on Avery's guilt. In Motion Denied, Zellner presents this evidence in a clear and concise manner, and she meticulously dismantles the prosecution's case point by point.

Zellner argues that Avery was the victim of a miscarriage of justice. She shows that the prosecution withheld evidence from the defense, that the jury was biased against Avery, and that the trial judge made numerous errors that prejudiced Avery's case.

Zellner also provides a compelling account of Brendan Dassey's confession. She shows that Dassey was coerced into confessing by law enforcement officers and that his confession was unreliable. Zellner believes that Dassey is innocent of the crime and that he should be released from prison.

Motion Denied is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the Avery case. Zellner's book is a powerful indictment of the American criminal justice system and a compelling account of one man's fight for justice.
